LION KING

SIMBA TRIUMPHS

Lion cubs are born with their eyes wide open, and at the age of six they are already full grown! Humans like to call them "king of the jungle," but lions don't usually venture into the jungle at all. Instead, they live in the plains, where their tawny coats blend perfectly with the rocks and sandy background.

The Baboon

Baboons might be the fiercest monkeys in the jungle, yet they take tender loving care of their young ones. These creatures get around by walking on all fours and have gigantic teeth, making a baboon "smile" something to see! They live in herds, usually ruled by a single wise old male.

LION KING

The Warthog

No one can say warthogs don't have ingenuity — these unusual fellows have been known to cozy up in the cool burrows that have already been dug out by other animals. It's easy to spot warthogs. With their large tusks and wartlike growths on their faces, humans call them ugly, but warthogs look just fine to each other!

LION KING

The Meerkal

Cute, but carnivorous. That's one way to describe the small, meat-eating meerkat. When they're not chowing down, meerkats like to burrow underground and they do so in groups. In fact, most meerkats live in colonies. While the group is at work or play, one or two meerkats serve as "lookouts" for possible predators.

The Hornbill

This colorful bird sports a gigantic bill topped off with a horny lump, so the name "hornbill" suits this feathered creature to a T. Not too surprisingly, the sound that comes from the bill is equally huge. It's definitely an attention getter when a hornbill sounds its ear-splitting "alarm-cluck" from its usual treetop perch.

LION KING

The Hyena

Scavengers of the night, hyenas are wolf-like animals who seek their prey after the sun goes down. Emitting bone-chilling yells, or "laughs," hyenas often strike fear in the hearts of other animals, who steer clear of this creature's powerful jaws. There's a little-known secret, however—hyenas are actually quite cowardly!

The Wildebeest

In the language of Afrikaans, wildebeest translates to "wild beast," probably because this animal is a very dangerous fighter when cornered. Also called a gnu ("noo"), wildebeest live in large herds and they are among the speediest animals in South America, trotting along at a steady clip using long strides as they advance.
